Nation Learning Lessons

"The wastage of war is enormous; but most of the money the governments have been used as home, and the temporary but the war borne without causing too great a strain on the people. All bend our backs to it and the load is not too unwisely adjusted by our legislators. In many ways we are establishing a new world order of the greatest value, we are creating for ourselves world-aspects and a world-position such as we never had before, we have a new respect for nation, we are scrapping and overthrowing old things; and the nation is learning the lesson of cooperation, and the no less valuable and needed lesson of economizing.

"Unless we make grave mistakes of omission or commission, we have nothing after the temporary disturbance which is probably essential to readjustment from a war to a new order of things for a period of great prosperity and auspicious achievement after the war, and I believe we shall all be surprised to see with what ease our nation will be able to carry the burdens which shall have inherited from our war expenditures—always provided that our householders and their reasonable wealth do those in authority.

"I am entirely convinced of my ability to meet the situation successfully if I mobilize the brain power of the nation, and if this right is accorded to the experience and mature judgment of the spokesmen of business, and if, while recognizing and respecting the rights of progress and social justice, we do not venture too far into uncharted waters."

the Germans when the present drive began lost everything except their motors, according to a letter just received from Mrs. Elizabeth C. Morrow, president of the Alumnae Association. Mrs. Morrow is in Europe with her husband, D. W. Morrow, of J. P. Morgan & Co. All, however, are eager to get back to work, and expect to make "a new start" soon.

"Especially during the forty-eight hours before the Germans reached Ham, the unit did wonderful work," says Mrs. Morrow in her letter. "They not only evacuated their own villages keeping three cars going constantly, but they also helped evacuate Niesle hospital."

Mrs. Barrett C. Andrews, '04, of Bronxville, N. Y., the director of the unit, is now conferring with the Red Cross in Paris relative to future work for the young women. The experiences of most of the unit members during the drive, however, has made it imperative, she says, to give a few weeks
